

Here's the thing I love about J. Black's: If you want beautifully plated upscale dining, you'll find it here. If you want a sexy bar with mood lighting and good music, you'll find it here. If you want both, and don't want to drive from one to the other... bingo, you've got it here. I devoured the char-grilled New Zealand Lamb Chop Lollipops served with a gorgonzola dipping sauce in about a heartbeat and was very pleased with the owner-recommended wine pairing to accompany the dish. Their signature is the "sharing plate" selection, where each plate is generous in quantity and also plated to easily be shared with others. At just under a year old (their first anniversary is this July), J. Black's has already learned the ropes and is doing it right.
